Market Check Strategic Canola Program

A Premium Marketing Program

Market Check's Strategic Canola Program suits growers who want access to a premium marketing and price risk management program that involves the strategic use of derivative products such as futures, swaps & options. The program implements a proven post-harvest hedging strategy that allows Market Check to leverage their national domestic trading footprint to add value post-harvest.

Key Benefits

- Independent actively managed Canola Program
- Track record of strong returns
- Incorporates derivatives to hedge downside price risk
- Flexible & secure payment options
- Transparent reporting of strategies/performance

Strategy

The foundation of the Strategic Canola Program is a post-harvest hedging strategy using a mix of oilseed futures markets. The Program offers the opportunity to participate in relative strength in the domestic market post-harvest, whilst protecting downside price risk and helping offset carry costs. Premium returns are achieved by following a strategic marketing approach and by accessing wholesale derivative and physical markets with volume.

The combination of a tight East Coast canola market and global oilseed fundamentals suggests there will be a number of opportunities to take advantage of post-harvest. Market Check believes an actively managed basis program will outperform selling into a depressed harvest market, while taking on less risk than carrying canola unhedged post-harvest.

Duration

The Program runs for six months and is finalised and paid out in June, unless payments are deferred to July.

Individual Returns

Your returns reflect market conditions in your location and contracting date. Equity is distributed based on an internal indexing system which takes both these factors into account.

Fees

A$7.50/mt flat fee deducted from the Program equity.
